7 Steps of Water-efficient Landscaping

1. Planning and Design

Planning comprehensively allows you to tailor your landscape to your particular needs or interests. Place plants in the proper areas of the landscape according to each plant's light, water, and space requirements.

2. Soil Analysis

Clay soils and sandy soils both present problems for water efficiency. Adding compost to soils and cycling sprinkler times can greatly increase water efficiency.

3. Plant Selection

Select plants that are appropriate for the climate and soil in this area. Group plants with similar water needs in the same areas.

4. Lawn Areas

Remember to create lawn areas of practical size and locate them where they will be most used. Consider planting grass such as fescue that require less water than traditional bluegrass.

5. Efficient Watering

Water infrequently and deeply in order to encourage plants to develop deep root systems. Remember to routinely check your sprinkler system for leaks. Consider using drip tubing to water trees, shrubs, perennials, and annuals.

6. Use of Mulches

Spreading a 3" layer of mulch in planting beds and under trees helps cool the soil and minimize evaporation.

7. Proper Yard Care

All landscapes require regular maintenance. Pruning, correct watering, and disease and pest monitoring will keep our plants healthy. A stressed plant isn't always suffering from a lack of water. Observe soil conditions, look for plant pests, and consider chemical damage when analyzing a plant problem.

A WATER CONSERVATION EDUCATION PROJECT

Sego Lily Gardens is an educational garden designed for the public to observe and learn how to use water conservation principles and practices to create a beautiful and water-wise landscape.

As you walk through the garden, please take time to read the interpretive signs and plant identification tags designed to help you learn about water conservation principles, practices, and plants. Please stay on the paths and remember to leave plants and materials where they are for the enjoyment of future visitors.

This garden is funded and maintained by the Sandy City Public Utilities Department. It is Sandy City's hope that Sego Lily Gardens will provide inspiration and practical ideas that garden visitors will apply to create their own water-wise landscapes.
